Morning Giggle

One fine day, a bus driver went to the bus garage, started his bus, and drove off along the route. No problems for the first few stops. A few people got on, a few got off, and things went generally well. At the next stop, however, a big hulk of a guy got on. Six feet eight, built like a wrestler, arms hanging down to the ground. He glared at the driver and said, "Big John doesn't pay!" and sat down at the back. Did I mention that the driver was five three, thin, and basically meek? Naturally, he didn't argue with Big John, but he wasn't happy about it. The next day the same thing happened. Big John got on again, made a big show of refusing to pay, and sat down. And the next day, and the one after that, and so forth. This grated on the bus driver, who started losing sleep over the way Big John was taking advantage of him. Finally, he could stand it no longer. He signed up for body building courses, karate judo, and all that good stuff. By the end of the summer, he had become quite strong; what's more, he felt really good about himself. So on the next Monday, when Big John once again got on the bus and said, "Big John doesn't pay!," The driver stood up, glared back at the passenger, and screamed "AND WHY NOT?!?!"

With a surprised look on his face, Big John replied, "Big John has a bus pass."

THE MORNING BITE ENVIRONMENTAL NUTRITION

Spotlight on supplements: bee pollen

Bridget Cassady

With their talents for making things including honey and hives, few people question the origins of the phrase “busy as a bee.” But, what are the benefits of some of their creations, including bee pollen? EN dives into why bee pollen is creating a buzz as a supplement.

Background

In addition to honey, honeybees produce many byproducts, including beeswax, bee venom, royal jelly, propolis and bee pollen. Honeybees collect pollen from plants, mix it with a small amount of saliva or nectar, and place it in “baskets” on their hind legs. The field or worker bees collect and transport the bee pollen to the hive. It is estimated that a colony of bees can collect between 50 and 250 grams of pollen per day (~15 to 45 kilograms or ~33 to 99 pounds of bee pollen per year)!

The composition of bee pollen can vary widely since it is sourced from different plant species, geographies, and seasons. Bee pollen has an extensive history of use in traditional medicine, especially in Traditional Chinese Medicine and in Ayurvedic practices. Bee pollen is estimated to contain more than 200 bioactive substances, including nutrients, amino acids, vitamins, lipids, enzymes, and antioxidants.

Evidence

Likely due to the content of polyphenols in bee pollen, cell and animal studies demonstrate significant antioxidant and anti-inflammatory effects. To date, data from clinical trials is limited and not conclusive. Additional research is required to better determine the therapeutic role of use of bee pollen in human health, especially for allergies, inflammatory conditions, and antibacterial effects.

Safety and side effects

In recent years, the FDA removed several supplements that contained bee pollen from the market over concerns of mislabeled or prohibited ingredients. Whether purchased at a health store or from the local beekeeper, be sure that you buy from a reputable source to help ensure safety. Although not all side effects are known, bee pollen is thought to be possibly safe and well-tolerated for most individuals in the short-term (30 days or less). Bee pollen allergies are rare but those who are allergic can experience serious or adverse reactions, such as itching, swelling, shortness of breath, or anaphylaxis. Please avoid if you have an allergy to certain types of pollen.

Interactions

Bee pollen might increase the effect of anticoagulants (warfarin) or may result in increased bleeding or bruising. As with any new diet or supplement regimen, please consult with your physician to discuss if supplementing with bee pollen may be appropriate for you.

Censorship and Taxation

In the 2015 election, then-Conservative Prime Minister Stephen Harper warned that if elected, Justin Trudeau would introduce a tax that would be applied to entertainment. This prediction has turned into reality thanks to the NDP-Liberal coalition. What's worse is that it's not only a tax but another case of backdoor censorship.

The most recent example is the music streaming giant Spotify, which has been sent a massive bill from the CRTC. Its membership prices have skyrocketed due to the Online Streaming Act (passed as Bill C-11).

While the cost of everything is going up, this price increase is a concerning trend for consumers at a time when virtually everyone is using a streaming service of some type. The Online Streaming Act regulatory burdens are increasing costs. Under this legislation, streaming services like Spotify, are required to contribute 5% of their Canadian revenues to a fund controlled by the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC). It's clearly an attempt at a hidden tax. Further, one of the fears is that this fund will become yet another Liberal-controlled slush fund that sends dollars to Liberal insiders.

The irony of this Bill is that it limits the ability of Canadian artists to succeed based on merit, as success will no longer depend on consumer preferences regarding what they want to watch, listen to, and consume. Instead, the CRTC will decide who receives funding or a leg-up in the digital streaming landscape. Bills like C-11 do not encourage real diversity but create artificial barriers to natural audience growth and engagement. In that sense, it is backdoor censorship, which allows the government to choose what you watch.

This not only affects what your choice of entertainment, but it will hurt the economy. Small startups aren't able to be competitive. Even major entertainment companies like Disney have withdrawn investments from Canada entirely due to increased costs, and now Spotify is raising prices again. These companies' decisions illustrate the two paths our digital streaming services will face because of the expensive legislation passed by this NDP-Liberal government: either they will offer fewer streaming options, or these companies will pull out of Canada due to unsustainable costs or they will have subscribers foot the bill, as affected companies pass these additional costs onto subscribers.

Bill C-11 reflects a fundamental misunderstanding of how the digital economy operates and a cavalier attitude to Canadians' Charter rights. Instead of fostering innovation and organic growth, it imposes a top-down control that increases costs, stifles creativity, reduces consumer choice, and gives the government agency the ability to silence voices that it decides it doesn't want to hear.

Common Sense Conservatives will restore freedom to Canadians, enable Canadian artists to produce Canadian content, encourage a robust creative economy in Canada, and save Canadians costs.
