Morning Gigue

A not-so-bright man is flying in a plane when his pilot keels over. He calls out: "Mayday! Mayday! My pilot is dead!"

Air traffic control responds, "Don't worry, I'll talk you through this. What's your height and position?"

"I'm six-one and I'm in the plane," he says.

"Repeat after me," says the voice. "Our Father, who art in heaven...."

Your Horoscope

by Mecca Woods

ARIES (March 21 to April 19)

Making time to laugh with friends or being in the company of encouraging people can boost your mood and improve your outlook.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20)

If you want to make a difference, lead by example. Take the first step.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20)

Today favors romance, whether you're single and looking or currently attached. You can also find success with a creative or artistic project.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22)

Use today as an opportunity to get organized, catch up to yourself, and finish those nagging but necessary items on your to-do list.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22)

Today is advantageous for self-promotion, pitching an idea or proposal, or collaborating creatively with others.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)

If you've been dealing with a stubborn issue concerning your work or wellness, today could aid you in getting to the root cause so that you can make improvements.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)

Your charm and intellect can aid you in manifesting what you want.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)

Prioritize your private time. You need a break from the outside world.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)

People will be hanging on to your every word. It's an excellent time for networking, making friends, or building an audience for your work.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)

Someone could put in a good word on your behalf, but their identity might not be immediately revealed. Think of them as your guardian angel.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)

You can make a positive impact on others through your kindness or generosity. Be a light among the darkness.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20)

Setting aside space in your schedule to rest can calm and clear your mind. It will also enable you to uncover answers that you didn't have before.

FOR TODAY'S BIRTHDAY

Some might consider you to be an enigma, but you would probably say that they just aren't too perceptive. You do best with folks who invest time in getting to know you and who also give you time to open up. When you do forge a bond with someone, you're loyal and protective. However, no matter how close you are to a person, you may still struggle with being vulnerable or asking for help. This year, as family and belonging are highlighted for you, developing a better support system and understanding of your emotional needs will be crucial for your success.

THE MORNING BITE ENVIRONMENTAL NUTRITION

Debunking dietary deceptions: Does eating fat make you fat?

Carrie Dennett, MPH, RDN

There's a certain logic to the idea that eating high-fat foods — even nutritious foods such as avocados, nuts and olive oil — can lead to weight gain. After all, one gram of fat contains nine calories, while one gram of protein or carbohydrate contains only four calories. But just as science has debunked the idea that weight loss or weight gain is simply the result of “calories in, calories out,” the idea that eating fat automatically leads to eating excess calories, or that dietary fat is directly converted to body fat has been shown to be not entirely correct.

Low-fat origins

The low-fat diet trend of the 1970s to 1990s was largely based on concerns about saturated fats and health. The weight loss industry — including many diet book authors — jumped on that bandwagon, promoting the idea that if you eat as little calorie-dense fat as possible, you can eat a larger volume of food and still lose weight. But instead of replacing saturated fat with healthy poly- and monounsaturated fats or more vegetables, fruits and whole grains, many people started eating more ultraprocessed fat free cookies, crackers and ice cream high in added sugar and refined carbohydrates.

The low-fat tide started to turn in the early 2000s, and more recently it's become quite clear that dietary fat is compatible with at least short-term weight loss. Take the ketogenic diet — which is high in fat, very low in carbohydrates, and moderate in protein — for example. However, it's not necessary to switch from one extreme (low fat) to another (high fat). Studies that have compared diets with varying ratios of fat and carbohydrates found that, on average, no single ratio is superior for weight loss or for health. This may be because some individuals respond better to a higher fat diet, and others to a lower fat diet.

The “right kind” of fat matters

Fat is an essential nutrient that, among other things, helps us absorb “fat soluble” vitamins A, D, E and K from food. It's also clear that including healthy fats in a meal can help you feel full sooner and keep you satisfied longer. “Healthy fat” is the key.

A 2018 Harvard study that looked at more than 20 years of data from almost 300,000 participants in the Nurses Health Studies and the Health Professionals Follow-Up Study found that when people increased saturated and trans fats in their diets, they were more likely to experience weight gain. But when they increased their levels of monounsaturated fats from plant foods and polyunsaturated fats from fish and plant foods, they weren't likely to gain weight, and some even lost weight. It appears that polyunsaturated fats in particular promote insulin sensitivity, which helps the body use carbohydrates for energy instead of storing it as fat.

The bottom line

Healthy fats have a place in any diet. Foods rich in polyunsaturated fat include fatty or oily fish such as salmon, sardines, anchovies and herring; some nuts and seeds, including walnuts, flaxseeds and sunflower seeds; tofu and soybeans; and vegetable oils such as canola, corn, soybean and sunflower. Foods rich in monounsaturated fats include avocados; peanuts and peanut butter; some nuts and seeds, including almonds, hazelnuts, pecans, pumpkin seeds and sesame seeds; and vegetable oils such as olive, canola, peanut, safflower and sesame.
